CARSON CITY -- Does Nevada's new governor plan to turn over operations of the state's community colleges to the counties? No.
Does he plan to take $70 million in Clark County property taxes to help community colleges? No comment.
- Sandoval and his transition team remain tight-lipped about specifics, but on Friday, Dale Erquiaga did rule out one rumor:
- Sandoval is looking at offering some type of "home rule" for local governments but that won't include letting them increase local taxes.
- And Erquiaga lent insight to another:
- Sandoval, he said, believes that the public doesn't care whether funds come from state or local sources, but about the services the money provides. That's another clear indication that he will look to local governments to help the state out of its financial pickle.
- "We are looking at where local services and local revenues match," said Erquiaga, also Sandoval's deputy transition director. "I am told in total there is about $20 billion in revenue collected by all governments. It's peoples' money. People don't care if it is spent in a county, municipal or state general fund, so why should we?"
